For siblings, parents, primary caregivers and other family members who have a loved one with a disability.

This workshop focuses on passing the roll of supporting, advocating and caring for your relative with a disability from the parents' generation to siblings and others. After attending this workshop, current and future caregiving generations will be better prepared for their future role. Parents or primary caregivers will also have clarity on the next steps to implement their succession plan.

We hope families will come together - both the current and future caregiving generations - to ensure a cohesive succession plan is built, inclusive of everyone. Families who don't necessarily have a successor in mind are welcome to invite someone to support them as they go through the planning process.
